Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies

BULLETIN No. 30

◆ TRAIL RIDE OF 1932 ◆

BY GILBERT W. GHEWY

"I'll take that brown one with the white feet." "Yes, Madam, your duffle bag will go up with the pack-train." "He's perfectly safe and a good goer." "Where's Bill?" "Are you sure that you wrapped that parcel securely and put it in the very middle of your kit-bag?" "Hold still!!!" "Better give me another hole on this stirrup." And so on and much more of it. Questions, admonitions, farewells vie with one another for hearing above the stamping of ponies, the rumbling of buses and the honking of motor-cars, at the mouth of the trail, leading from the roadway into Sundance Canyon, as the 1932 expedition of the Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies gets under way, bright and early on a fine July Friday morning.

At the Banff Springs Hotel all has been hustle and bustle since an unusually early hour. Men and women in riding kit breakfasted heartily, checked up their trail baggage and proceeded by bus and auto to the starting-point. Here, as already described, much congestion and conversation. In the middle of it all stands a slightly-built man in a black and white checked mackinaw and weather-worn stetson, chatting quietly with some of the guides. He is Lt.-Col. Phil A. Moore, president of the Trail Riders and himself an "old-timer" in the Rockies. He knows that "the tumult and the shouting" will subside after a while and that this trail ride will set off just as comfortably and efficiently as all the others have since 1925. And so it does, with the little colonel astride his pinto, at the head.

Spruce and pine tower above the riders as they proceed, in Indian file, on the first leg of their journey. Here and there are more open spaces where the poplars twinkle in the sun and the hundred-and-one varieties of multi-colored flowers do their share in making the countryside one of the world's loveliest. A slight check and Healy Creek is forded. Then up and up, through deep woods, across purling streams, and round seemingly impossible corners in the trail, till noon comes and a halt is called for lunch, by the side of a clear Alpine stream. A sandwich, coffee and a cigarette flavored with a few very plain words from the president on the need of care when smoking on the trail, and the column is off again, to turn right, very shortly into a smaller valley and climb yet steeper trails to Sunshine Camp, the first night's stand.

Here, almost "on the top" is a sturdy cabin, built by the Canadian Pacific, a focussing-point for the array of gleaming Indian tepees behind it, where the Trail Riders find accommodation for their stay. The cooks are on the job, and while most of the riders have gone afield to explore the beauties of mountain streams and Alpine pastures, the pack-string comes in, with bedding and baggage, and in a surprisingly short time the camp has assumed that "settled-down" air, which is born only of long-experienced management.

"Grub's ready!!!" The terse but welcome information floats down the valley. And what a meal! The tin plate seems capable of holding any quantity and any variety of food. Coffee never tasted so good before.

Dusk comes and from the campfire, set in a ring of logs, come the sweet strains of a guitar and a yodeling voice proclaiming its owner as "Just a Yodeling Cowboy." The sing-song has started and Wolff Carter is getting in some good work. By and by the choruses start and old-time tunes to new-found words rise into the night with the smoke from the log fire. Then, suddenly, one last song and—bed.

In the first streaks of dawn, the night-herder drives in the horses and the outfit gets busy saddling up, so that all may be ready for a start immediately after breakfast. One by one, the riders emerge from their tepees.

Breakfast, baggage and bye-bye Sunshine Camp, for the ride is off, up onto the very top of the world, headed for the summit of Simpson Pass and the Assiniboine district, its final destination. And who shall forget the crossing of that great quartz ridge, with peaks all round, valleys heading hither and yon and only the sky above? Miles upon miles upon miles of the glory of the Rockies; ever the same, yet ever changing, as the sun brings yet another mountain-top into strong relief, or the wind clears the cloud from the brow of yet another giant. And there, far away south, towers Mt. Assiniboine, its head capped in cloud; its sides gleaming with snow, beckoning the column on. And on they go, down Citadel Pass to tortuous Porcupine Hill, where the trail zigzags from side to side of a pletely as if it were a stage set. For we are entering Rock Valley, and never was any place more appropriately named. In and out among great crags and boulders the trail leads. But the stern but lovely valley is soon past and the line of horses turns into Og pass, with the gleaming lake of the same name, and Mt. Assiniboine well in sight. Now the trail is leading down, and ever down, till suddenly Lake Magog spreads itself like a magic carpet, with Mt. Assiniboine and its satellites towering in the background. A steep valley, through gaunt poles that were trees until the forest-fire got them, years ago.

The leader dismounts and leads his pony, others follow suit and down and down the long line snakes, while the cook goes jingling by, cross country wherever possible, headed for the little shack that looks like a pin-point so far below. This is Porcupine Cabin, at the junction of the famous hill and the Golden Valley. It is also lunch.

Into the saddle again and up and on, climbing and ever climbing. The scene changes, as com-white flagstaff catches the eye, and beyond it, dotted along the shore of the lake, cabin upon cabin, a little Alpine settlement. This is the C.P.R. camp, and beyond, higher up in the trees and reached across a rustic bridge over a hurrying stream, is the Alpine Camp.

This is "roughing it" de luxe, for the cabins are equipped with real beds and real bedding and running water. Each has a good stove and an ample supply of firewood, while the main cabin serves both as dining-room and recreation hall. It is easy to settle down here in solid comfort and the ponies are soon forgotten as the party splits up to roam the shores of the glorious lake or visit friends in various parts of the camp. In the evening, supper and sing-song; lamplight gleaming on sunburned faces; men and women singing, for the sheer joy of being alive.

Sunday dawns. Parties are formed to ride with cameras and fishing-rods, in search of new conquests. Wonder Pass, leading to Marvel, Gloria and Terrapin Lakes in the neighborhood of Mount Eon, is a popular choice. So are Sunburst and Cerulean Lakes on the other side of the Assiniboine group. Some of the more venturesome go climbing, others hike into the many lovely valleys of the region, while yet others stroll round the lake to the very foot of "the Matterhorn of the Rockies." It is a happy day for all.

It is an important day too, for the forty riders who set out from Banff are here joined by twenty-two trail riders from Lake Windermere, headed by Dr. Harriett E. Cooke, president of the summer camp for girls at that point. Complete as a unit, headed by their own guide and their youngest member, a mite of ten, whose home is in Minneapolis, the newcomers make camp in the afternoon and drift into the trail riders' quarters for the sing-song in the evening. The harmonium is dug up from the baggage, and a fair-headed young Diana, who spent the winter studying the piano in Poland, leads the singers through the gamut of the trail ride songs, interspersed with choruses by the Windermere girls.

Across the Alpine meadows, through a grassy valley, then into woodlands, the ride streams out from Assiniboine on the first stage of its homeward journey. Out of the forest at Og, then hard left up to Brewster Pass.

Rock, rock and more rock. Rock above, as far as the eye can reach. Rock touching the sky; rock before, rock behind and rock all round.

Then, the trail snakes down, still over rock, to a point where the head of Brewster Creek smiles into view and the riders look down, through glorious forests into a smiling valley, locked at one end by the great pass, where broad grazing-lands are set in shady trees and a little cabin's smoke gives promise of supper. This is Brewster Camp.

Tepees are set up; the cooks get busy; a National Parks warden drops in for a bite and a pipe; fires alit in the tepees and the Trail Riders settle down for their last night in camp.

Tuesday morning sees another early start, and after a long but easy ride down Brewster Creek, Sundance is again reached and here the afternoon is spent, till the final meal in camp and the great pow-wow which closes the 1932 trail ride.

Guests from the Banff Springs Hotel drive and ride out to attend it. There are songs, speeches, election of officers of the trail riders and the now well-known choruses ring out for the last time. Then, hearty handshakes, a warm farewell to the guides, and the party goes back to Banff, by bus and auto; back to the life of baths, bell-boys and breakfast-in-bed. The 1932 Trail Ride is over.
